Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

- SOC / Inland REOC remains activated in support of 2014 Drought

SITUATION SUMMARY

Northern California Weather of Concern

- Dry and warming weather is expected this week. Locally breezy north to east winds are anticipated during the middle of the week as high pressure rebuilds across the region. Daytime highs will be above normal Thursday through Saturday. A Freeze Warning is in effect overnight, tonight for portions of northeastern California, as crisp overnight lows will develop in many areas as winds subside and a cool, dry airmass allows efficient radiational cooling with the longer nights of autumn.

Southern California Weather of Concern

- A ridge of high pressure will build over Southern California Thursday through Sunday. This, in addition to offshore flow, will result in hot daytime temperatures and drier weather conditions through Sunday.

Significant Activity

California Urban Search & Rescue (US&R) Activity, 2014-FIRE-6504:

- The National Urban Search & Rescue (US&R) Response System's Central Division Multi-Task Force & Incident Support Team (IST) Exercise is scheduled to take place October 3-6, 2014 in Salina, Kansas. Members of the eight California State/National US&R Task Forces participate in the Incident Support Teams. The White IST is being mobilized to support this Training Exercise.
- Eight (8) White IST members are from CA: 2 from CA-TF2, Los Angeles County Fire Department, 1 from CA-TF3, Menlo Park Fire Protection District, 2 from CA-TF5, Orange County Fire Authority, 2 from CA-TF7, Sacramento Fire Department, and 1 from CA-TF8, San Diego Fire & Rescue Department. A Cal OES Mission Number has been generated and entered into Cal EOC.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

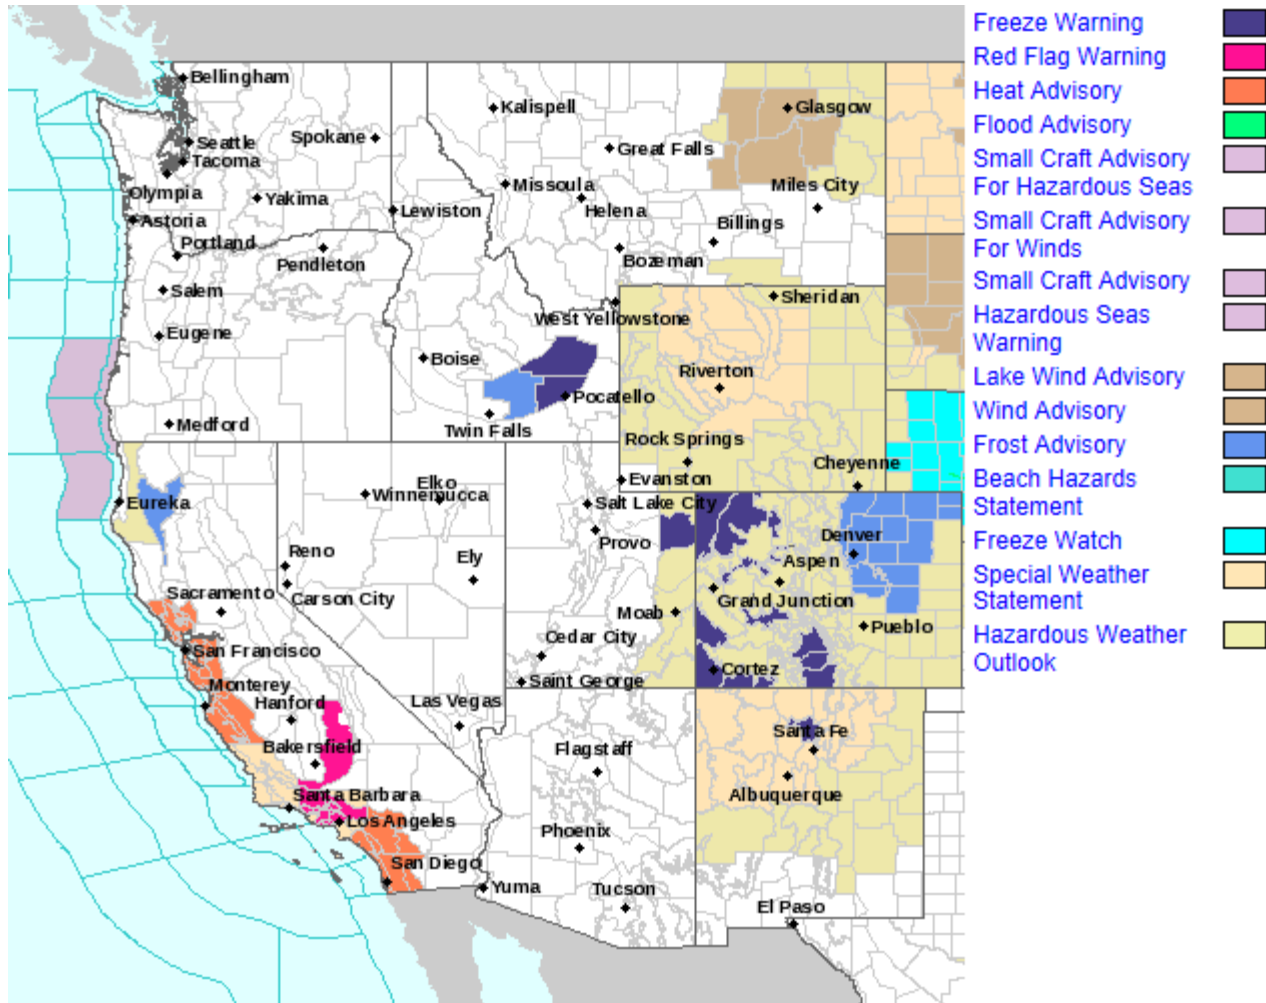

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A strong upper level high pressure ridge will be over California until early next week. Maximum daytime temperatures will be 6-12 degrees above normal. North to east surface winds from the lower Western Sierra slopes to the coast will gust to 20-25 mph, and higher in wind-prone areas, mainly during nights and mornings. In areas with these overnight winds, humidity will only recover to 25-40% and temperatures will be mild. Minimum daytime humidity will be 5-15% in many inland areas. Weak low pressure will develop off the Northern California coast early next week and move on Wednesday with only a few clouds and a wind shift. Temperatures will be closer to average for early October and a light onshore flow pattern will improve overnight relative humidity recovery Monday through Wednesday. There is a chance that another offshore wind pattern will develop under increasing high pressure late in the week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A strong high pressure ridge expanding over Southern California will bring near record high temperatures today through the weekend. Weak offshore pressure gradients will generate period of east and northeast winds over portions of Southern California during the night and morning hours. Today, expect local offshore winds of 15-25 mph with some gusts to around 40 mph, primarily across Ventura County and "Canyon Country" in Los Angeles County. Other areas will see wind speeds in the 10-20 mph range before the winds slowly decrease this afternoon. Tonight, winds will increase slightly over Orange and San Diego County where some gusts to 30-35 mph can be expected by daybreak Friday. Temperatures will be much warmer today with highs in the upper 80s and 90s at the coast to near 100 in the valleys and lower foothills. The mountains will see temperatures in the 80s below 7,000 feet. Minimum relative humidity will be very low today through the weekend with minimums as low as 4-7% below 5,000 feet during the afternoon hours. Relative humidity recovery will be poor overall through Sunday night due to the weak offshore winds. Temperatures will continue to climb Friday and Saturday with temperatures as high as 108° in some of the inland valleys of Southern California. A weak trough may bring some relief from the heat early next week by ushering in a return of onshore flow. It will be cooler at the coast Monday, but it will remain hot and dry across inland areas through next Tuesday. Temperatures will drop to slightly above normal readings for the second half of next week, but no rain is expected during the next 10-14 days.
